Frankfurt University of Applied Sciences places great importance on providing students with Personal Development training, through interdisciplinary offers and targeted promotion, in order to encourage students to become self-confident and act responsibly. To strengthen this field of learning and development, Frankfurt UAS is implementing a project that is unique among universities of applied sciences (HAW) – the School of Personal Development and Education (SCOPE). SCOPE is based on four pillars: personal development, social responsibility, key competencies and HAW didactics. Firmly anchored in your faculty, you will work in an interdisciplinary team of professors on the establishment of SCOPE, network the existing expertise at the university and further develop it in a targeted manner. In total there are four professorships to be filled, which will converge in the area of personal development and the coordination and development of a corresponding HAW didactic.
